

HOW TO:

Media Credits

Each time you do research, you must give credit for any work you borrow. That includes books, Web sites, newspapers, magazines – anything you read or view to understand your topic. These credits go into your bibliography, called 'WORKS CITED.'

What you may not know is that you must also give credit for the visual images you use in your presentations – photographs, videos, artwork or any visual image you use to help show what you know. These credits go into your 'MEDIA CREDITS' that you create on a Word document.

Here are the elements that must be on your list of Media Credits:

- ➔ 1. THE LOCATION where the image or media file is found in your presentation:
 - example: Slide 13 or Page 7
- ➔ 2. THE CAPTION OR A DESCRIPTION of the image or media file. If a caption is not provided, write your own description, like this:
 - example: The Statue of Liberty as it appeared to immigrants in 1923
- ➔ 3. THE NAME OF THE WEB SITE OR DATABASE where the image or media file can be found
- ➔ 4. THE URL where your media file can be found on an open Web site or in one of the River Dell online subscription databases

Here is the properly formatted credit for the image of the eyeball above:

- How To: Image Credits, photograph of an eyeball, Retail Prophet Consulting, <http://www.retailprophet.com/blog/page/2/>